NEW CURRICULUM ON RACIAL UNITY LOOKS TO THE BIBLE FOR ANSWERS

The Center for Biblical Unity's upcoming curriculum will help Christians to navigate the current racial climate through a biblical lens.

Los Angeles, California – The current cultural climate has left many people feeling lost, hurt, and confused. The narratives about race and unity that are abundant in popular culture are not following through with the promised results. Many Christians struggle to reconcile what the Bible says with cultural narratives such as Critical Race Theory. In light of this struggle, the Center for Biblical Unity is coming out with a curriculum that seeks to help Christians live out the reality of biblical reconciliation.

Reconciled - A Biblical Approach to Racial Unity, is a six-session study series designed to help Christians take a biblical approach to unity that is rooted in historic Christianity. The course helps students to understand what the Bible says about unity and equips them with practical strategies to pursue unity in day-to-day life.

Reconciled includes both written and video materials and can be used by small groups, large groups, or individuals. It will be released in July 2021 and is available for pre-order at www.CenterForBiblicalUnity.com.

Reconciled was developed by Monique Duson, founder of the Center for Biblical Unity. Monique holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in sociology from Biola University and is pursuing her Master of Arts degree in theology at Talbot School of Theology. She spent many years working in underserved communities in the United States and abroad. Monique spent years advocating for Critical Race Theory before a series of encounters led her to pursue what the Bible had to say about unity. She then founded the Center for Biblical Unity to train and equip other Christians to lead profitable, biblical conversations on racial unity.
